

2. A thread is any sequence of programmed actions, as well as a fundamental unit of concurrency. A process is a container that holds one or more running threads, and it also protects them from unwanted interactions with unrelated threads running concurrently on the same computer.